Print Works Snappers

Mr. Harvey Powell reports some very good records made on Government work in the Packing Room by Joe Edwards and Thomas Fuller, with Millard Fogleman assisting, and then by Millard Fogleman and Jesse Collins, with Luther McCandless assisting. We read so much in the papers about how many working people in the country are showing a poor spirit towards the War Effort, that we are glad to put in an item of this sort, and furthermore, we know that the poor spirit is being shown by a trifling, pitiful, small minority, and we hate to see it get so much publicity. While on the subject of the kind of spirit that is winning the war for this country, we want to point out that Sgt. Jack Marshall received special mention for the fine spirit that he and his crew had shown in their particular assignment. We all remember that Jack showed that same spirit in his work here, and it is the kind of enthusiasm that attracts attention anywhere you go . . . Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Barnes finally got off to Jacksonville, Floriada, for a few weeks of good weather . . . Mr. W. L. Thornburg finally got off to Eastern Carolina for a few days of hunting. He had pretty poor luck because it was too late in the season and the birds were wild . . . Mr. R. H. Souther, assisted by Mr. Lacy Wright, has been assigned the job of organizing and carrying on a new department at the plant, namely, a full time laboratory. Mr. Joe White is filling Mr. Souther's shoes in the Color Shop . . . We were glad to see Lt. Troy Lee Trexler at th plant on Monday, wearing ribbons underneath his Flier's Wings. He is back in this country for a while . . . We picked up an interesting story which we are writing up and printing because we think it will bring home to you some of the meaning of the war. So many of us have relatives abroad that this ought to be interesting.

The Story

"This was at a nair field north of London. Anne had come up to the air field to take possession of the effects of her young flier husband who had been killed in action. An Air Captain and I invited her to stay for dinner at the Officers' Mess. She had accepted. The weather was very thick. We had roast beef for dinner, and we were half through the course when we heard a plane coming swiftly toward the building, and then we heard the screech as it pulled up and over. Someone was lost in the fog, trying to come down. All of us got up from the table and went outside. In a short time the plane came over us again, very low, obviously looking for the field but unable to see it for the fog. Three of us went to the Radio hut. The Sergeant was sitting over his instruments with both hands on his head. 'I can't send him any directions' he said, 'because the Germans are raiding this area and any directions that I send this single plane would direct the German Air Forces to this field and endanger the lives of all of us.' We went back out of the radio hut and listened to the motors of the plane. In a little while we realized that he was coming in again, and that this time he would try for a landing, and then we saw him, coming in too fast and at too much of an angle. He realized his danger too late, and tried to pull up, but he crashed and the plane exploded, and the 5 occupants burned to death screaming. We threw some artificial foam on the fire but it did no good. This was too much for Anne, who collapsed. Nobody finished supper. This sort of accident could not happen today because of technical radio improvements.'

Getting The Facts

There never was a time that existed in the history of this country when it is more important that people try to understand and cooperate with each other. Understanding and cooperation cannot be realized unless people honestly try to base their opinions and arrive at conclusions from factual information.

Rumors and half-truths are extremely dangerous, and we feel assured that our enemies can benefit in no greater way than by the American people being critical of each other and jumping at harmful conclusions from half-truths and rumors. The very fact that we have freedom of speech and freedom of press in this country makes it more important that the American people weigh what they read and what they hear carefully. Furthermore, it also behooves all of us to not abuse our privileges of freedom by spreading information which we cannot verify or by repeating half-truths or flimsy rumors.

Unfortunately, when a false impression is made because of half-truths, rumors and lack of understanding it is very difficult to correct such an impression. Many extremely unhealthy situations have been a result of false information which was probably innocently spread.

Most of the time it is not very difficult to obtain true knowledge and facts if a person is interested in obtaining them, and we, therefore, would like to recommend to all of our readers a policy of trying to determine true facts and to ignore rumors or grapevine information until they can either be substantiated or disproved.

We can not lose by getting the facts. We can lose much by not doing so.

Washington Snapshots by James Preston

Farmers and farm workers now deferred from military service because of their occupation, and whose agriculture activity does not conform to national aims, may be called upon in the near future to sharply increase their production goals or face cancellation of their Selective Service deferments, Com. Patrick H. Winston, Assistant Executive, National Headquarters of the Selective Service System, has announced recently.

With the Senate scheduled to open debate soon on a bill to ban future food subsidies, War Food Administrator Marvin Jones has announced a 1944 production program calling for government-guaranteed support prices for 34 principal farm crops.

The WFA chief also effected a sweeping reorganization of his agency, resbuffling important posts and departments.

The new production program would require continued use of subsidies, since some of the support prices announced are above the OPA's ceiling and would involve a financial loss for the government.

The timing of this action by Mr. Jones was considered in some Congressional quarters as evidence that the Administration has arrived at a compromise with subsidy opponents that would enable it to continue most phases of its price support program, estimated to cost $1,000,000,000 a year, and possibly give up its rollback prices on meat and butter.

In another move on the food stabilization front, Administrator Jones has established a wage control program for all agricultural workers, setting a maximum ceiling of $2,400 a year for such labor. WFA labor offices will set up state farm wage boards to hold hearings and fix maximum wage rates, functioning similarly to the WLB in fixing wages for industrial workers.

Health-Recreation Department News

It took an extra period in an extra game Wednesday, February 2, to decide the winner of the first half of the league schedul of the boys division. The Mustangs and Thunderbolts of the White Oak branch tied up and had to go an extra three minutes of play in which the Mustangs nosed out ahead 19 to 17. The game was nip and tuck throughout and the followers of each team was kept in a state of suspense as to the outcome until the final whistle blew. The Mustangs had a little advantage in height, but, the Thunderbolts off-set that advantage with their fighting spirit, determination and fine play. These teams are going to be scrapping on throughout the second half of the league.

The second half of all the leagues is now on, the weaker teams are showing improvements and a much closer race is anticipated in the finals.

Oak Ridge Military Institute basketball squad will bring two teams to the White Oak Y.M.C.A. gym Saturday night, February 12, to engage both the Varsity and Junior Varsity. First game will start at 7:30.

A swim meet for boys 12 to 16 years will be held at the White Oak branch Saturday night, February 19. Parents and friends of the boys in the Boys' Department are invited to attend. The meet will start at 7:30 o'clock.

Squander Bug Fillers

All Alabama Women's Divisions have formed Vigilante Committees to hunt the Squander Bugs down and stop them in their tracks. For the Fourth War Loan, the Squander Bug Vigilante Squads, will be out selling Bonds in house-to-house canvass. The implied threat by the Vigilantes that "the Squander Bug will get your money if Fourth War Loan Bonds don't" is designed to put Alabama over the top.

West Virginia retail stores and theaters will post signs reading, "Starve the Squander Bug—Buy Fourth War Loan Bonds" in every store window during the drive.

One county in West Virginia will picture its "E" Bond goal as a mammoth Squander Bug which will be blocked out as sales of F Bonds are reported. Another county will present its quota as a family of Squander Bugs—and each $10,000 worth of E sales will exterminate one member of the "Bug" family. Still another county will run an editorial contest in the high schools on "How Fourth War Loan Bonds Squash the Squander Bug." The winner will receive a War Bond.

Indiana will intensify its Fourth War Loan sales with signs at all booths reading "Don't let the Squander Bug get your money. Leave it here." Women's clubs have all held anti-Squander Bug meetings in January to urge their members to check the squander-urge by extra Bond-buying in every Indiana family.

Three War Loans Give United States Forty Billion Dollars For Total Of All Three Drives

Sales Of Series E Bonds Jumped 65 Percent From Second To Third War Loan; 4th War Loan Demands Record

The first three War Loans have within less than a year sold a total of over 40 billion dollars of securities to non-banking investors — an unprecedented achievement in war finance. A goal of 14 billion dollars has been established for the Fourth War Loan, which continues to February 15, 1944.

Despite the fact that the Third War Loan was the first large scale drive in this war for the sale of securities exclusively to non-banking investors, total sales exceeded the sales in each of the two preceding drives. In both the First and the Second War Loans, commercial banks were allowed to subscribe for approximately 5 billion dollars of securities in each drive. Total sales to all investors in the three war loans were as follows:

First War Loan (December, 1942)
$12,947,000,000
Second War Loan (April, 1943)
$18,555,000,000
Third War Loan (September 1943)
$18,943,000,000

The intensive effort which was made during the Third War Loan to reach the many thousands of investors in each state is reflected in the increase of more than 65 per cent in the sales of Series E Savings Bonds from the Second to the Third War Loan.

Total sales of nearly 53,000,000 pieces of E bonds in the Third War Loan drive is the equivalent of about one bond to every man and woman gainfully employed in the United States. It also represents average sales of 1000 bonds by each of the 53,000 issuing agents throughout the country.

The goal for Series E bonds in the Fourth War Loan campaign is $3,000,000,000, or slightly more than $500,000,000 over the total sales of this issue in the Third War Loan. To reach this goal, millions of Americans must buy an Extra $100 bond during the campaign. The large army of volunteer salesmen, which has done such effective work in previous drives, has been expanded in an effort to make a personal appeal to every individual investor in America. Farmers' Future Vitally Affected By Bond Savings

Lloyd E. Partain Urges 6,000,000 Families To Build Up Reserve In Extra Bonds

Aside from sending his own blood into battle to defeat the enemy, the most patriotic duty of the American farmer in wartime is to keep Backing the Attack with his home front efforts. His aid in bringing a quicker victory comprises many activities, but two of his most important functions are the maximum production of essential foods and fibres and full financial support of the war effort through investment of every possible dollar in War Bonds.

Farmers have done an excellent job of exerting the full managerial and physical abilities of themselves and their families in attaining stupendous food production goals. They have earned for themselves recognition on the production front in spite of many handicaps, such as shortages of machinery and equipment, labor and materials.

As a result of this magnificent performance, farm incomes have soared to an all time high. It is not only patriotic but extremely good business that the more than 6,000,000 farm families of this country make wise use of their increased earnings. The 4th War Loan affords farm people, therefore, a splendid opportunity to continue their full support in Backing the Attack on the battle fronts, as well as building for themselves greater security in the future through maximum investments in War Bonds.

Every farmer should ask himself these important questions:

1. Am I doing my full share in backing my son or my neighbor's son in uniform?

Real satisfaction and peace of mind can be gained by having an individual part in supplying our armed forces with all they need to win. They are willing to give their lives if necessary to protect our American way of living. The least we can do is to invest all we can and as often as we can in U. S. War Bonds.

2. Am I planning a sound financial program for the future, while at the same time performing my full patriotic duty?

There are certain financial "musts" of the near future that every farmer must consider. These include such items as repairs, replacements, fertilizer and sufficient working capital to provide for more expensive machinery, more power, and a probable high level of wage rates. War Bonds will provide a reserve.

3. Am I preparing myself financially against farm hazards?

Savings from today's higher income can and should be made to cushion unforeseen adversities.

4. Can I meet my family's wants and needs of the future?

Now is the time to save for the many things you can't buy during the war. Peacetime purchases will keep factories busy and assure good markets for farm products.

5. Am I preparing for future security and independence?

In this classification include money for college expenses, a well?developed life-insurance program, travel, and conservative non-speculative investment ever offered the American farmer in a Series "E" U. S. War Bond where dollars actually do double duty. They return $4 for every $3 invested if held to maturity—10 years.

"Let's All Back the Attack" by investing all we can in War Bonds during the 4th War Loan Drive.

WARTIME HOMEMAKER

By The HOMEMAKING SPECIALISTS General Electric Consumers Institute

Conservation Tips For Your Wardrobe

Take care of the little things . . . advises Ruby Littlefield, director of the Laundry Institute at General Electric Consumers Institute.

Care For Your Buttons

Due to wartime restrictions on materials it virtually becomes "button, button, who's got some buttons" for there are no more pearl buttons (unless they're prewar stock) and most every conceivable type of button now is being made with plastics, wood, and other non-priority materials.

Keep your prewar buttons new and shining looking and make the most of the wartime substitutes by the simple expedient of removing all buttons from outer wearing apparel before you dry clean or wash them.

Washing and dry cleaning dulls buttons—even glass ones. Besides they might be broken in the cleaning process. And with no buttons to iron around or press over, you will get a better looking finished garment. Plastic, rubber and celluloid buttons and hot irons don't get along well together either, as you undoubtedly know.

Belts and Buckles

To clean belt buckles and belts with simulated leather backing, use a soft brush (a fingernail brush is fine) with either soap and water or cleaning fluid. Brush the belt and buckle clean and dry quickly. Do not roll in a towel. The present metal used in buckles is likely to rust and belt backing will not withstand the crushing.

Shoulder Pads

For a smooth, well-built shoulder line, all shoulder pads should be removed from dresses before being cleaned or pressed. Pads should be cleaned separately. Pull and fluff the padding during drying so the pad will not be lumpy. When dry, press lightly with a warm iron.

When a dress is made with the shoulder pads stitched right in the armhole seam, it is advisable to rip the seam and remove the shoulder pad so the pads can be cleaned separately and so they can be removed when pressing the dress. It is almost impossible to get a smooth fitting shoulder line by trying to press dresses with shoulder pads in place.

Hooks and Snaps

Remove all hooks and eyes before washing or cleaning. It is not necessary to remove snaps, but hooks are liable to mar the fabric when an iron is run over them on the garment. Fasten snaps together during the cleaning process. To avoid the imprint of hidden snaps appearing on the face of the fabric in pressing, use a heavy padding underneath the snap and place paper over the top of the fabric so the iron doesn't come in contact with the fabric as you press over the hidden snap.

In washing garments with wartime snaps on them, be careful of long soaking in the washing process, for the metal used in the present manufacture of snaps (as well as hooks and eyes) will rust and stain the garments if they are immersed in water too long. Fabrics will be rust stained also from wartime snaps when garments are dampened and rolled in a towel. To overcome this, place a strip of paper toweling under and over the snaps when rolling up the garment.

Here is a message for men who expect to enter military service. Before you leave for the service, place your social security account card with your other valuables; and, above all, leave it in good hands. You will need it again when you return to civilian life. For information concerning account numbers or Old-Age and Survivors Insurance benefits, call or write the Greensboro, N. C., office of the Social Security Board located at 913 Guilford Building.

New Smaller Size Bonds Ready For Fourth War Loan

Series E from $25 to $1000 Denominations Streamlined To About Half Of Original

Washington, D. C., Feb. 11 — Chances are you will buy one of the new small size "E" War Bonds when you buy that extra Bond during this Fourth War Loan Drive. Eighty-six million have been printed since Aug. 1.

Streamlined to approximately half the size of the Bonds issued to date, the saving in paper and production costs alone amount to $1,750,000 in one year.

All Series "E" Bonds from $25 to $1000 will be in the new size, and will be issued (if not already) as the stock of original War Bonds is sold out.

The original War Bonds cost $27.03 per thousand to print, while the new issue costs but $17.12 per thousand, on the same durable, distinctive bond paper.

By 1945 the Treasury estimates that 3,374 tons of paper will be conserved, based on present estimates of the 86 million already printed and engraved.

Your son, brother, husband in uniform is standing at the side of every canvasser in the 4th War Loan, watching, waiting, wishing. Let's all Back the Attack.

They Say—

"I suggest that we forget this talk about buying War Bonds. We aren't buying anything. We are only lending our money. All that is happening is that Uncle Sam wants to borrow some money from us, money that we will get back again. And lending our money in interest bearing War Bonds is better than having it taken away from us in taxes."—Al Smith, former Governor of New York.

"Our people want to go back to a government of law. We have suffered long enough under a government of men."—Rep. Frank Fellows, Maine.

"The farmer is impatient with and contemptuous of those who formulate economic policies which violate sound principles . . . by arbitrary and capricious regulations and directives."—Edw. A. O'Neal, president American Farm Bureau Federation.

"Healthy corporations can provide jobs for thousands of people. They also can pay high taxes.

"If we want jobs after this war we had better see to it that our corporations are healthy—that is, unless we prefer to have the government take over business and all of us work for the government."—Ralph Hendershot, Financial Writer.

"Political ownership or management of business, or agriculture, or commerce, and the public interest does not require it."—Gov. Bricker, Ohio.

This Business Of Living

Finding a Full Life

Last week — remember? — I was pretty much put out over the notion that even in peacetime the gals prefer jobs to housekeeping.

Well, I'll go part way with that: I'll grant that most of us need an outlet for our interest, and a variety of experience, that homemaking alone can't provide. And so I want to bring up that enormous, 99-per-cent-feminine segment of daily activity which is neither house-keeping nor job, but what we might call "community service."

I'm thinking of all the hospitals that need women's auxiliaries for financial support and other help. I'm thinking of P.-T.A. groups. I'm thinking of community chests, village improvement groups, library boards and children's aid organizations—so terribly important in combating juvenile delinquency. Yes, and I'm thinking of civic leagues that keep tab on local laws and lawmakers!

These are activities that must have women—and that only a woman unencumbered by a job can handle. Oh, a business girl can get out to an evening meeting. But the real leadership of civic life must be undertaken by women with some free daytime hours.

We all know this from experience, don't we?

And in every town we have fine, intelligent women—homemakers, wives, mothers—who have never held a job but have found all the interest, stimulus, and contacts of public life through community service.

Many of these women could have held distinguished positions in business or industry. Are their lives the less happy, do you think, or their experience less rich?

I believe we'll all agree on the answer to that one!

Invest 50 Per Cent Of Pay In Bonds Weekly

Demonstrate How To Fight Squander Bug By Doing Your Budgeting Carefully

Washington, D. C., Feb. 11—Three young women war workers employed by Western Electric Company in its New York City's tube shop were recently cited by the payroll savings section of the War Finance Division of the Treasury Department as examples of all-out support of the war bond program. They do their war jobs conscientiously, budget carefully to see how little they can live on, and manage to turn 50 per cent into War Bonds every pay day.

Catherine Gedra, 3949 81st street, Jackson Heights, is one of the three girls. "I feel as though I'm investing in my own freedom, and if there were no interest at all on War Bonds, that would be all right with me too," she says.

has been in service fourteen months, just about half of their married life.

Her night shift job at Western is that of a tube "Ager"—a far cry from her pre-war position with a perfumer.

Fifty per cent of salary is a lot of money to put away each week with a five and half year old daughter to support. But Helen Foster, 694 Eighth avenue, with a bit of scrimping, manages it.

"I'd have to do it," smiles Helen.

Record Number Of Issuing Agents For Fourth War Loan To Insure Fast Bond Deliveries

Washington, D. C., Feb. 11—Sales of Series E Savings Bonds in the Fourth War Loan will be cleared through a record-breaking number of 53,000 issuing agents, and countless thousands of additional sub-agents, so that prompt delivery of bonds purchased during the campaign is assured to every investor.

Issuing agents are authorized to inscribe bonds with the name of the purchaser, and make immediate delivery, and they deposit the proceeds with the Federal Reserve Banks for the account of the United States Treasury. Subagents, which consist largely of retail stores, branch plants of large corporations, etc., also inscribe and make delivery of bonds, turning the proceeds over to the main office of the corporation, which has qualified as an issuing agent, and which, in turn, transmits the proceeds to the Federal Reserve Banks.

New issuing agents are qualified almost daily but as of November 15, 1943, they were classified as follows:

Commercial and Savings Banks	15,326
Building and Loan Associations	3,670
Investment Industry	9,610
Investment Industry	72
Other Corporations	9,610
Post Offices	21,554
Total	52,933

"We aren't cashing them in right away after the war,' she declares vehemently. "If everyone does that, buying bonds won't help stop inflation. So we're holding ours the full ten years—then maybe we'll buy a home."

Catherine, who now puts 50 per cent of her pay into bonds each week and expects to increase the amount just as soon as she finishes paying a heavy dentist's bill, is also an Army wife. First Sergeant Michael Gedra "even if I didn't think it was my small share of helping. But I have to live up to what my daughter expects of me. Inez already has over $100 in bonds herself, all saved out of the 25c allowance she gets each day. If she can do without candy and sodas, I guess I can do without a few extras too."

Helen has to budget closely to buy a $25.00 War Bond every week. "If I see a nice dress, I just look the other way," she says. "I save $1.50 a week by doing my own hair. My roommate and I plan meals carefully so they'll be nourishing, but still cheap. And there are other little things."

Libovia Perconte, pretty member of a war-work-minded family shrugs away any credit for being a 50 per cent a week War Bond buyer.

"It may sound trite by now, but it's still true," says Libovia. "If the boys can give their lives, we can at least lend our money."

Shelley Smith Urges All American Women To Ignore Luxuries Until After War

Shelley Smith, researcher for Life Magazine, is the wife of Life's famous photo-reporter, Carl Mydans. With her husband, Mrs. Mydans went to Europe at the outbreak of war in September, 1939, and covered the war-fronts there. In 1941, the Mydanses were sent to the Orient, where they covered the Sino-Japanese war from Chungking and the Chinese front lines and the Allied preparations for the Great Pacific war in Burma, Singapore and the Philippine Islands. When Manila was occupied, January 2, 1942, the Mydanses were interned by the Japanese. They have recently returned to America on the repatriation ship, Gripsholm.

If we do not believe in this war we cannot win it. If we do believe in it, and in the freedom and equality of all men, we must put at least our money if not our lives into it.

When a Japanese soldier goes to war he is told to forget his father and his wife and his children. He is sent out to die for his Emperor and not to look back. When our boys go over they remember their homes and they fight for them. That is because we are Americans and have had a glimpse of a warm life in a free world.

We must remember our men and build the world that they are fighting for.

I have seen Filipino women risk their lives to help American prisoners of war. They love luxury as much as we do; and I have seen them go without their pretty clothes, their movies, their entertainments, their homes, their children, their food—to help Americans. American civilians are not asked to risk their lives for their soldiers. But American women can go without luxury to win this war decisively and to bring back our boys from the prison camps before they starve to death.

If we do not believe in this war or in the world we can build after it, then let us send the world to hell—and our soldiers with it. If we do believe, then let us put everything we've got into winning the war and the peace. Every cent we have must go to back our country in this war. We must buy our quota of bonds and then buy extra. Extra Bonds may win the world for freedom.

Scouting Celebrates 34th Anniversary Of Founding During February 8 - February 14

The Boy Scouts of America, this week, celebrates its 34th anniversary. All persons connected with war activities on the home front know how much the Scouts have helped to put every effort across.

Boy Scout Week gives the American people a chance to recognize their worth. It reminds us also of their volunteer adult leaders — the Scoutmasters, without whose guidance and encouragement no Troop could long continue. These men are working harder and longer in factories and offices. Many are also air raid wardens and Victory gardeners. But their devotion to their Scouts never falters, which is a higher compliment to Scouting than anyone else can pay.

The man who leads a Scout Troop is doing an important war job. Whether he is continuing a peacetime activity or merely "filling in" for the duration, the Scoutmaster renders an essential service to the community and to the nation. His "compensation" is the satisfaction of watching individual growth and enjoying the gratitude and friendship of his boys.

There are Boy Scout Troops now which need adult leadership. Men who help the boyhood of their respective neighborhoods deserve recognition and encouragement from all.

Americans Battle Squander Bug

As Fourth War Loan ammunition, the Squander Bug is unique.

Americans must deal that Bug a knock-out blow if the Treasury is to raise its 5.5 billion dollar quota for individuals. The money that buys War Bonds represents savings and self-denial. It is just the money the Squander Bug craves—if we would let him have it.

The Federation of Women's Clubs of Michigan has a clean-up squad ready to banish him from their membership's pocketbooks. The club member who sells the most Fourth War Loan Bonds will be awarded a War Bond prize.

The AWVS will take up the battle against the Bug by selling Bonds from jeeps stationed at strategic points in the shopping district. A "live" Squander Bug will taunt the customers into buying action with such remarks as, "Don't buy Fourth War Loan Bonds. Give me the money instead!"

Michigan Girl Scouts will join in the anti-Squander Bug fray, enlarging the pledge "A Girl Scout is loyal, a Girl Scout is thrifty" to include bans against all needless spending—"even movies" as one youngster bravely declared.

Ralph E. Murphy, Michigan business man, advises his customers "to 'can' your dollars for future use . . . in Fourth War Loan Bonds. The Squander Bug has no can opener. War Bonds will starve him to death."

Leading Detroit merchants are also in on the fight.

William Demery, president of Demery and Company, stated: "We are convinced that the Squander Bug means ruin for individuals and business firms alike, and with this conviction, we will offer prizes to our employees for the sale of Fourth War Loan Bonds and Stamps."

The schools of Michigan will hold trials during the Fourth War Loan charging the Squander Bug with being an Axis agent and an enemy of America's best interests.

Alabama has conducted its Squander Bug campaign as a drive to catch this notorious lawbreaker "dead or alive". Locally produced posters reading "Wanted—Information leading to arrest of Squander Bug" — have been placed by the highway police in every corner of the state.
